

The work of the Nineteenth century is finished, and in time it will be recorded as a part of the history of the deluge of mankind. When the records made of the work that has preceded it are examined, it is learned that the work of the Nineteenth century has not been surpassed by those who lived in other centuries. In some particulars it may require aid from the imagination to ascertain sufficient work in other centuries to make a comparison with the work in the Nineteenth century.

Much of the work in the last hundred years has the appearance of a summing up of work that preceded it. The work has taken a form that places it in a position that may require the lights of succeeding centuries to fully understand it. Should it be that it will need other lights than those that are present, there is not a man living who could write its history and do the work as it should be done to give it the place it should occupy as a record of events.

The work has been large in the physical, political and moral worlds. The discovery and application of forces in physical departments have been immense, when compared with work of preceding centuries. Its work in the political world is large and well done. The application of forces in the moral world, which includes a summing up of the good there was in the centuries of the Christian era that preceded it, is a work beyond the range of a finite mind. In the latter work there has been laid the foundation of a grand future in the moral and Christian world.

The mere naming of forces discovered and applied in physical departments would be as a feather in a balance, but we do not wish to be understood to say that the discovery and application of these forces are as a feather in a balance. Steam has been made to take the place largely of a family work horse, and to our fathers that wild and seeming deceitful force, the thunderbolt, has been harnessed and made to do service obedient to the will of man, its master. The railway, the steamship, the telegraph and the telephone furnish some knowledge upon the discovery and application of physical forces.

The means of application of these forces are details that would require volumes to explain. By means of these forces man seemed to walk, gallop, and at this time he is more than running at the speed of a race horse.

Movement in the political world is not so rapid to outward appearance as it is in the physical, but the advance made within the century in political science is wonderful. The advance in political science is more than was made in the time included from the birth of Christ to the close of the Sixteenth century. In 1688 England arrived, after a struggle of six centuries, at a free government, which had its faults. One of these faults made an appearance through the rebellion of the American colonies, which has done no harm, but has aided in the general advance made in political ideals. The revolution, which had its origin in a mistake arising out of an imperfect system, furnished a lesson to England which it learned to great profit, and as a result of its learning Great Britain developed in the Nineteenth century a liberal government at home and in its colonies, which is so far superior to the free government that preceded it, that it should be classed as a triumph of the Nineteenth century. The people of Great Britain and the people of its colonies govern themselves.

Another of the triumphs of the century is the grand political system of the United States, which should be classed as the political triumph of the world. Our space is limited and will not permit a statement of details that make up its superiority. One of the advantages included in the triumph in government is a removal of monarchial or imperialist rubbish which half educated and weak statesmen in our time are seeking to re-establish.

All the enlightened nations have advanced in political science. Even Russia has emancipated its serfs, and physical slavery has ceased to exist among civilized men.

Moral developments in the century have been such that there are no means by which its measure may be taken in exact manner. In the reign of Constantine, or about the Fifth century, the Christian religion numbered among its conquests the throne of the Roman world. From that time to the Eleventh century social and political chaos largely prevailed. In the Eleventh century, which was the darkest time of the dark ages, knight errantry was established as a result of the teachings of the Christian religion, and it became a civilizing medium till the Fourteenth century, when it was superseded by better methods.

From the Eleventh to the Nineteenth century a contest continued for freedom against feudalism and monarchial power. A more favorable class of circumstances to secure individual liberty developed in England than made an appearance on the European continent proper, and as a result of these circumstances, England in 1688 secured a free government, at which time much had been accomplished in other parts of the world to secure individual rights.

From the beginning of the Eighteenth to the beginning of the Nineteenth century the contention seemed closed except in the American colonies, which closed with well known results. About the beginning of the Nineteenth century the political and moral worlds seemed to blend as they had not at any time before and therein is an epoch in the history of mankind.

As individual liberty increased the cause of contention which had involved the more positive passions in man ceased to act upon him and the moral and religious sentiments there are in him had opportunity to develop in a general way, as they had not had opportunity to do preceding the Nineteenth century, and in this fact there is a summing up of all the good that had preceded the century just closed.

The work of the Nineteenth century which surrounds us is a result of individual liberty and the exercise of individual rights secured at its beginning. The advanced civilization of the century which we love to talk about is a result of individual rights and liberty, which came at this time as a result of 1800 years continued contention. These rights secured one hundred years ago to the people of the Nineteenth century, they have used them to the best advantage by making them foundation planks for a grand future, religious, moral and commercial.

We have said there is not a man living who is equal to the work required to write the history of the Nineteenth century. The reason for so saying is that it will require the lights given by developments made in succeeding centuries to place the work of the last century where it belongs in history.

At the opening of the century a policy of systematic hostility was practiced by the First Napoleon with as much ability as it was possible, which was disastrous to Europe, and to France in particular. The wisdom and ability of nations as well as individuals is shown in detesting themselves to making the grounds of harmony and peace stronger than those of discord and war.

There is an example when compared with the work of Napoleon of their truth at this time going forward in China, where good sense seems to prevail among the nation, which is in happy contrast with the continued wars of Napoleon at the beginning of the century, which is evidence of the existence of a foundation that has been made for the work that future centuries will continue, according to the plan of an All-wise God, to the end.

"Human Hearts."

A play which gives a wholesome lesson, while arousing the sympathies of the spectators and moving them now to tears, now to laughter, is "Human Hearts," a forceful melodrama now launched upon another season of success. It is a play for the family, young and old. It is a relaxation from care and worry, a force in character building through exciting such feelings and and sentiments as tend to develop and strengthen a man.

It is universal in its power to interest, to move and to amuse, for it deals with experience common to mankind, though specialized by a chosen environment, life among the hills in Arkansas. Once seen, this drama is sure of a hearty welcome on a return date.

Ice Harvest Begins.

Men are flocking to the ice ponds up the river and the winter's harvest has begun in earnest. The ice is from 8 to 14 inches in thickness on the various ponds and is of the best quality.

The reservoir affording fine sport for skaters and by tomorrow the river dams will be safe to venture on, if the weather remains cold. Last night the thermometer registered 6 degrees above zero.

THE FISH QUESTION

Need for Legislative Action in an Important Matter.

The streams and lakes of this State are fast being robbed of their supplies of trout, and if the present unregulated methods of taking fish continue, the fishing industry will soon cease to be remunerative.

It is very essential that we have an office of Fish Commissioner to look after numerous obstructions, such as dams without fishways; and destructive substances, such as sawdust, and other deleterious substances in our streams, that may render our water unfit for domestic use.

Our annual run of fish, which leaves the lakes for the purpose of performing their function of reproduction, must be permitted to reach the most favorable spawning grounds.

Almost the entire run of trout which leaves Pyramid lake, most deposit their eggs in the lower portion of the Truckee river.

The eggs having been deposited under a thin gravelly covering, heavy rains come and the water continues to rise until it has become so high and swift that not one of those eggs could possibly survive.

They may be washed away, devoured by insects, or covered to such a depth as to be entirely lost.

Under the above circumstances the eggs perish by millions, and the wonder is not that so many perish, but that any survive at all.

On the other hand, had we an adequate appropriation for the maintenance of a hatchery, fully ninety per cent of these eggs could be saved, while by the natural way of spawning, not more than five per cent become fertilized, and from this amount only a small percentage attain to maturity.

We have an excellent code of protective laws, and all that is now required is that we put into practice the art of fish breeding, and aid in maintaining a natural supply, and, also, increase the supply beyond its natural limits rapidly enough to meet the necessities of a constantly increasing population.

To unsaid and derange, nature can do but little to meet the natural demand for fish to eat, for fishing, unsupported by fish culture, will soon destroy a cheap and healthful food for thousands of our people.

Practically, from now on, the Truckee river will be divided into two streams, and the great benefit we have in the past derived by California stocking the headwaters of the Truckee will be cut off for the reason that for ten months during each year all the water in this stream from the power mill to the power plant will be diverted from its natural channel and conveyed by pipe and flume to the turbines, and the result will be that small fish moving down stream will be destroyed by passing through the wheels. During the high water of spring when fish can pass over these dams, they are migrating up stream, thereby greatly reducing the amount of parent fish that we now have, for they cannot drop down stream during the period of low water.

Plantings of trout for the benefit of our people, must be made below the above-named establishments, and I would prefer not to see any fish distributed from a hatchery into the Truckee river, for the benefit of our State, above the head of the Steamboat ditch.

So thoroughly do I understand the exact condition of the Truckee river since the operating of the power mill thereon, we must not approve of the taking of eggs to be hatched and planted solely outside our State, as it will result in absorbing the only means which we have of restocking the various mountain streams throughout the eastern portion of this State, which are becoming barren of trout. To replenish these streams, we will be dependent on the parent fish in the Truckee river, as there are few, if any, outside this stream, that produce a sufficient amount of parent fish to replenish itself.

Great care must be taken that we do not impoverish the supply of rainbow trout in the Truckee river, for sooner or later, we will have to resort to this stream for plantings of trout elsewhere within this State.

If we should be so unfortunate as not to secure an appropriation for the maintenance of a hatchery, we must certainly legislate against the affecting of the natural breeding throughout our streams.

It is with regret that I lay down my pen when writing in connection with our fishery interests, but I recognize the value of newspaper space and trust this matter may be given the necessary consideration by our coming Legislature.

Diamond Coal contains no sulphur and makes no soot. It is better than any coal mined in Ohio, Illinois, Indiana or any western State. Fifteen percent better than Pleasant Valley coal. One ton of Diamond Coal is equal to two and one-half cords of pine wood. We will furnish anthracite if there is demand for it.

IT IS NEEDLESS TO SAY.
That everybody uses groceries. However, many of them do not know that most of their food is adulterated by scheming manufacturers. Such concern do not get our trade. Our prices are as low as GOOD GROCERIES are sold for

C. NOVACOVICH, GROCER

A Christmas Demonstration.
Of suitable and wished-for Christmas gifts would be incomplete unless it included our line of shaving sets, cutlery, skates, sleds, etc., especially adapted for Christmas weather and Christmas presentation. You may neglect yourself in overlooking us in your round of Christmas shopping.

Held in High Esteem.
People who know consider our selections of staple and fancy groceries second to none.
People who don't know us are more than welcome to look at our wares and into our methods.
Groceries for Christmas receive our special attention, to the great delectation of Grandfather Santa Claus. Whisper: Get your orders in ahead of time—you'll fare no worse, better, possibly.

Many Things Are Meant
By many dealers who claim to handle groceries. When they advertise GOOD GROCERIES no mention is made of PRICE. When price is mentioned QUALITY IS OVER-LOOKED. Again, sometimes they dwell on the virtues of a LARGE STOCK. In this case no claim is made to carrying FRESH GOODS.
We Preach the Three Plain Virtues
